PROFILE

Chris has been defending insurers against fraudulent claims for nearly 15 years. He successfully represented two insurers in the first case which went to trial, where damages were obtained from the organisers of a fraud ring. In doing so he helped establish a template for this kind of action. More recently, both as a junior and in silk, he has assisted in dealing with several fraud rings where the sums claimed amounted to between £1 million and £2 million. He is used to identifying the client's objectives and advising on the appropriate strategy to meet them. He particularly enjoys being involved with the collation and presentation of evidence and works well in the team environment which they generate. He is also very experienced in advising on the various sensitive issues which cases of this sort often throw up.
